Disability & Employment in Japan

Target Audience:

Undergraduate students, Graduate students

Duration:

1 or 2 class sessions

Learning Objectives:

This lesson aims to explore the situation of people with disabilities on the Japanese labor market. It encourages students to discuss barriers faced by disabled workers at different steps of their professional careers.

It provides documents including statistical data and can serve as a base for a methodological discussion on the use of public statistics and quantitative data for sociological research.

It is also aimed to foster discussion on the lived experiences of disabled workers in Japanese companies, in terms of material working conditions and human relations, in order to highlight the different aspects of “reasonable accommodation”, a keyword of contemporary disability policies.

Potential Courses to Include this Lesson in:

- Japanese, Asian or global disability studies
- Any course focusing on work in Japan or Asia
- Any course that focuses explicitly on disability
- Japanese, Asian, or global business or economics courses

Required Materials:

- Data Tables (see below)

Potential Readings:

Discussion Questions:

- What do you think are the main barriers faced by disabled people in the field of employment ? Do you think the situation is different between people living with different catégories of impairments ?
- Reforms aimed to promote disabled people's employment have taken place over the last decade. What kind of data do we need to assess whether this reform was a success? How can we gather such data?
- Based on table 1, would you say that disabled people's access to employment has improved since 1987 ? What kind of complementary data would be necessary to prove this point more accurately ?
- How is it possible to reduce discrimination at the time of hiring ? What do you think are the benefits and limits of the quota system ? Do you think that the current labor shortage in Japan is a factor fostering the hiring of disabled workers ?
- How can companies put the principle of "reasonable accommodation" into practice? Who can decide the content of accommodation and how ? How can the principle of reasonable accommodation be applied to human relations inside the company ? Do you think accommodation mechanisms created for disabled workers can benefit other workers as well ?
- Based on figure 2, what do you think of the retention of disabled workers in Japanese companies ? What do you think are the causes of this phenomenon ? How can retention be improved ?

- Based on figure 3: what do you think are the causes of the income gap among disabled workers and between disabled workers and the general population ?
